Would You Rather Questions

You can use as a question of the day replacement:

Each day a new question is on the board. I store these in a binder and it is a student's job to replace the question each morning.

Students answer the question based on the choices during morning independent work.

Many of my students use devices, so they are expected to prepare their answer on their device.

Students can use the sample sentence under the question each day to help them write (and say) their answer.

For my students who do not use devices (or who are super fast), I also give them a weekly journal for our daily questions that they keep in their morning binder. There are several worksheets based on student levels. One involves drawing a picture answering the question, another writing the answer, writing the answer using a complete sentence, and answering the question plus adding details.

During our morning meeting, each student shares their answer and we move their picture under their answer choice, creating a graph of sorts.

It is a great way to learn about everyone and also helps teach students that there isn't always a "right" answer, and it's okay for your answer to be different than someone else's.

Would You Rather Questions

You can also use these as a social or journal activity.

A variety of journals are provided and detailed in a couple of pages. Pick the journal that will best work for each student and your class.

(My favorite is the journal that has students write and draw a picture!)

If your students can not write, you can print smaller copies of the questions (explained on the next page) and then you can have them cut and paste their response on an appropriate journal page.

Remind students that these questions are just for fun! They don't have to really do (or choose) the answers. Only use if your students will have fun with this! Help your students develop a sense of humor ;)

Have students complete the journals first. Give students the level appropriate for them (coloring, completing a sentence starter, writing a sentence).

Then have everyone share! They can show/read their journal and:

Option 1: Put the question on the board and continue drawing the line to separate the two halves. Have each student answer and move their picture (or name on a sticky note, or write their name) under their answer.

Option 2: Cut off the pictures and put the options on opposite sides of the classroom. Have students physically move to their answer.

Talk about similarities and differences!

Printing and Ways to Use

Print full size pages or print four to a sheet! (see example of job posters below but can be done with questions and put on a ring or stored easier, or save on paper!)

When you print smaller you can also use these for students to cut and paste their answer if they aren't able to draw a picture for a journal.

Smaller cards can be kept on a ring.

Full size pages are great for full class use, as a poster, or visual at the front of the room.

*Open in Adobe or a PDF viewer to get the options to print four to a page (2 to a page is also an option if you want something just a little bit smaller).

Daily Questions Pack 3

This pack includes 3 options for each "What do you like?" question and REAL PICTURES!

Daily Questions Pack 2

This pack follows the same format as the original, including 2 options for each question, with 180 different questions!

Vocational Questions

This pack has two options for each question, consisting of 64 occupation questions!

PLUS this pack includes:

Interest Inventory (in color or b/w): Each student also gets the vocational interest inventory to fill out each day with their response. When completed this can be used for data to include in the IEP (great for transition plans!)

Job Posters: Each of the 64 jobs have a poster with a two sentence description of that job. Read this with your students in order to start a discussion about that job, or to give students an idea of what people in that career do before they choose their answer.

Thanks for purchasing!
